As a child, the “Christmas Season” always began for me on Thanksgiving night. Our family would sit together and watch the “Lighting of the Rich’s Tree” on tv. Rich’s department store was eventually purchased by Macy’s, but at that time the headquarters were in downtown Atlanta. Every year the show ended the same way, with someone singing “O Holy Night.” Like so many of the carols sung at this time of year, “O Holy Night” communicates so many emotions of the season:

“Long lay the world in sin and error pining till He appeared and the soul felt its worth.”

As I think back on the events of the year, it seems as if there were a lot of conversations about a person’s worth. Identical events could happen to different people, yet the treatment was different based on characteristics of the person rather than the details of the event. People once hailed as heroes are vilified overnight without changing any behavior whatsoever. Professional athletes stepping away from their sport for reasons of mental health. Examples like these raise the question of the worth of an individual.

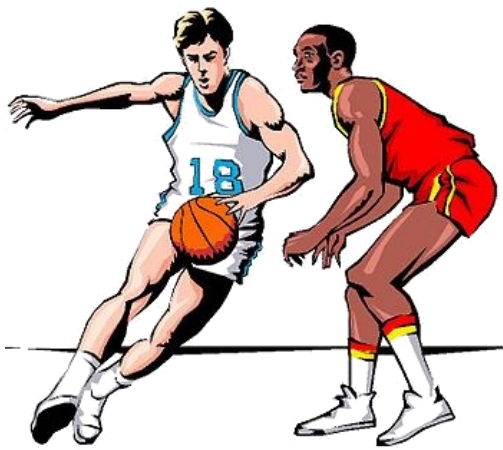

The story of the Baby in the manger, whose birth results in “good tidings of great joy which will be for all the people,” addresses the greatest need for all of mankind – the value of the soul. In that instant, the Son of God,

“who though equal with God, did not consider equality with God something to be grasped, emptied Himself by taking on the form of a servant, being born in the likeness of men. And being found in human form, He humbled Himself to the point of death, even death on a cross.”

In that instant, God expresses His infinite love for the pinnacle of His creation, man and woman. And, even though they are tarnished by sin and grieved by guilt, He requires no act of penance or duration of humiliation to earn acceptance. Rather, He “demonstrates His own love toward us in this, that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us.” Can there be a greater definition of the worth of the soul other than the unconditional love of God offered to everyone everywhere?

When you start to open presents this Christmas, you may find that certain packages require scissors or a pocket knife or pliers. To “open” what God has given only requires repentance, faith, and confession. “Thanks be to God for His indescribable gift!” Merry Christmas from my family to yours!
